

Welcome to contemporary music. My name is Kathryn Calder, and this is a song of mine from my self-titled album called 'Song in Cm'. It's a love song I wrote around the line 'You could never be mine', which is about how important it is to let people be themselves.

Song in Cm

The beauty of my better half
I see it clearly looking back
You could never be mine
No, you'll never be mine

We fight the fights that leave us soft
And feel the sharpness of the rocks
You could never be mine
No, you'll never be mine

And when the pressure bears its weight
You let me rest my weary bones
And when the emptiness won't take
You let me rest with you alone

And if we fall, then we fall

Sometimes I know just how I feel
Sometimes I know I've no idea
You could never be mine
No, you'll never be mine

If in the slight forgotten bend
The well of ink's run out by then
Oh well never you mind,
Because we're coming on high tide

And when the pressure bears its weight
You let me rest my weary bones
And when the emptiness won't take
You let me rest with you alone

And if we fall, then we fall

All our lies, all our lives
You could never be mine
No, you'll never be mine

And when the pressure bears its weight
You let me rest my weary bones
And when the emptiness won't take
You let me rest with you alone

And if we fall, then we fall
And if we fall, then we fall
And if we fall, then we fall
